

Published based on Is it beneficial to use a real estate agent when buying a home from a home builder?

Is it beneficial to use a real estate agent when buying a home from a home builder?

Question by bjdmb: Is it beneficial to use a real estate agent when buying a home from a home builder?

A real estate agent told me he could help negotiate the price and get us the better deal on a newly built home. The real estate agents at the builders location says they can get me a better deal if I don't have a realtor. Who is blowing smoke? Do I actually get a better price if I go with a realtor or without?

Best answer:

Answer by suzanne g

Unless you know the real estate business inside & out, you need a realtor. They make sure all the t's are crossed & i's dotted. Just because house is brand new does not mean it's trouble free. Do have it inspected by home inspector before buying.

Give your answer to this question below!

You can also find this article published on Is it beneficial to use a real estate agent when buying a home from a home builder?, and on the tag pages Agent, beneficial, builder, Buying, Estate, From, home, Real.